

Sidney gasped for air
and looked at her friends there,
who stared and tried to think.

“Let me try some,” Poodle said.
Sidney nodded her head. “Sure.”

“Well, I might begin...,” he began, but “Yes!” Sidney cried. “Exactly!”

“What?” asked Poodle, and the beagle thought it meant him.

“No, I mean that—”
“Yes!” Sidney cried. “You’re right!”

“What?” asked Poodle.
“Oh, the point is—”
“Right!” said Sidney. “Perfect!”

Poodle was so confused;
his mind nearly oozed.

“Yep,” said What?. “Those are good ones.”

“What good ones?” asked Poodle.

“Well, no, and oh,” said What?. “See?
They just show emotion.
They have no grammatical function.”

“Ah,” Poodle said. “I think
I see what you mean!
Adjectives modify,
conjunctions join,
prepositions show relationships,
but interjections do not do
any grammar things.
They just show emotion. Wow!”
