

Once upon a time, there was a funny adverb named Noisily.

Noisily wanted to be with friends, and so she started walking through the sentences,
looking for a friend to modify.

In a long sentence, Noisily saw the noun Rain.

"Hey, Rain," she cried. "Can I modify you?"

"The noisily rain?" said Rain. "Better not."

Then, in a short sentence, Noisily saw the verb Chewed.

"Hi, Chewed," said Noisily. "Can I modify you?"

"Chewed noisily?" said Chewed. "Well, you could, but I wish you wouldn't."

So Noisily crept sadly away.

Just when she was about to give up,
Noisily noticed a busy verb, Chattered.

Chattered was full of talk, but Noisily interrupted.

"Hi, Chattered," said Noisily. "Can I please modify you?"

"Chattered noisily?" said Chattered. "Oh, yes, mmmmm, yep yep!"

After that, they chattered noisily.
