

8. INTERJECTIONS

Oh, there is one more kind of word.

It is the INTERJECTION.

An interjection is an emotion word;
it is neither placid nor serene.

It does not do anything to other words,
as other parts of speech do.

No, it does not modify any word,
or show any relationship, or take the place
of a noun, or join any words together.

It just shows emotion. Yep.

That is why it is called an interjection;
it is just thrown (ject) in between (inter)
the other words, and it has no grammar function. Yikes!

Some interjections are
wow, well, yikes, oh, gosh, yes, and no.
